Dear Prof. Lederberg,

Thank you for your reply to our pamphlet "Four Solutions".

Half a century of great power involvement in the Middle East conflict does not seem to have solved very much. While we certainly do not intend to advocate unilateral neutrality on Israel's part, we are striving for a more serious solution than merely "containing terrorism".

Yet as you yourself suggest, the great powers are not currently determining Israel's future - whether they wish to or not - since the problems involving our future - refugees, terrorism, etc. - can only be solved by Israelis and Arabs. With this in mind, we are sending you, under separate cover, our latest publication, "The Middle East in the Year 2000", which seeks to involve people like yourself in an effort to encourage a long-range, regional view of the Middle East conflict. We would be happy to receive your comments.

Sincerely yours,

Dan Bavly
Secretary
